They give people the feeling that they are part of the (3) _____. Compared with 2D films, the tickets for 3D films are (4) _____, but many people (5) _____ mind paying for the experience.

The return of 3D

3D films aren't a new idea. They were in our cinemas 50 years ago, but a lot of film fans thought they were bad quality. Now many of our favourite animated films are in three dimensions, so why did film-makers decide to start making films like these again?

3D films sell tickets and make money. Film fans love wearing the glasses. They feel part of the action and they enjoy the special effects. 3D films are fun and they encourage people to go to the cinema.

The worst thing about 3D films is that tickets are always more expensive than tickets for 2D films because the films cost a lot to make and cinemas have to buy new digital screens. However, at the moment, many film fans are happy to pay for the 3D experience.
